Student design nets $100 for two Graphic students.

Two Graphic Design and Advertising students, with a word picture of their own, have won a $100 prize in the Conestoga College Graphic Design Competition. The competition was held in June 1982 and Peter Puklis, student of Graphic Design, and Alan Lyle, student of Advertising, were the winners.

Winner of the contest was Peter Puklis, who designed a poster for the Conestoga College Graphic Design Competition. The poster was a black and white design featuring a large, stylized letter 'C' that formed the shape of a person's head and shoulders. The design was simple and effective, capturing the essence of the competition's theme.

Cousteau sails into Hamilton

by Jack Jankovic

With what seemed like the return of a hero, Jacques Cousteau sailed into Hamilton to attend the 10th anniversary of the Conestoga Society's founding. The event was held at the Conestoga College, where Cousteau was the guest of honor. He was accompanied by his wife, Reine, and several other family members. The event was a celebration of the society's 10th anniversary, which was founded in 1972. Cousteau was a member of the society and had been involved in its activities for many years.

Voters issues arise

by Colin Wood

There's more than one issue at stake in the upcoming election, says a group of local voters. They are concerned about the environment, the economy, and the future of the province. They want to see a government that will address these issues and work for the benefit of all Ontarians.

The voters are also concerned about the future of the province. They want to see a government that will work for the benefit of all Ontarians and not just a few special interests.

responsibility. To state that, it should be made more explicit, voters are being asked to vote for a government that will be responsible for the future of the province.

that it would be more than simply responsible. It would be a government that would be responsible for the future of the province.

Players' union must lower demands

By Mike Banner

The longer the NFL players' strike drags on, the more a pattern it becomes that the players' union has failed off more than its rule book.

The union has pointed itself into a corner by making unprecedented demands that the owners will not and cannot accept.

The players want 15% of the gross revenues derived from television broadcasts. They also want a wage scale which would determine a player's salary by years of service on the league. If the owners agreed to these demands, proposals they would be foregoing the services of two fundamental revenue sources. The right to a pension made through the ownership of a team and the right to distribute players' salaries on the basis of ability.

Union chief Ted Turner and the players are intruding on management territory when they ask for a cut of the profits. Employees of a firm now are not entitled to a portion of the profits made by their employers, and neither they agree or not. The players are simply employees of a business.

A wage scale is nothing new in sports. They exist in almost every organized industry in the country. But in sports where an individual's abilities is judged on his ability, a wage scale simply cannot exist. On the contrary, it would make today's great stars less valuable. The point is to reward distinction among some players. Superstars would have to settle for the same money as lesser players if they played the same games and had the same number of years on the league. Is that fair? And where would that make incentives for the superstars to consider players of less talent the same money drives different levels of ability. Would owners not consider mediocre players big money simply because they played last year in the League's top tier? Not likely. There might even begin to drop that is forced retirement in favor of less experienced players.

The only reason to benefit from a wage scale appears to be the average player. But the superstars of the league average player. In the long run, if the quality of play would deteriorate and the position, maintained by a wage scale would be far outweigh the benefits.

As for the strike continues, the only path for a resolution would appear to be a mediation by the demands made by the players' union.

Contra City's Mike Muro (22) is the leader in scoring. Nigel Noyes (24) and Doug Schreier (23) were in a possible rebound.
